If you got hit by a bus tomorrow, would your school collapse in 72 hours?

If you were gone for 30 days, could your team execute the strategic plan without you? Do you have a written succession plan? Can you name which decisions only you should make versus which your team should own? Most school leaders can't answer that, because every A Player starts with a clear scorecard, and that seat never got one.

You gave your best teacher a $7,000 raise. She quit anyway. It wasn't about money.

Does she know exactly what success looks like in her role? Does she see anyone held accountable when expectations aren't met? Most school leaders can't answer that, because if there's more than one owner, there's no owner.
